THE WAR WEST OF THE MISSISSIPPI.

Official Reports of Gen. Steele's Movements.

THE DEFEAT OF MARMADUKE'S FORCES.

The Rebels Under Price in Full Retreat.

The Whereabouts of General Blunt's Army.

ST. LOUIS, Thursday, Sept. 3.

A letter from Gen. STEELE, received at Headquarters Tuesday night, dated Clarendon, Aug. 30, says:

"Our advance, under DAVIDSON, has driven MARMADUKE's cavalry, about 3,000, out of Brownsville, capturing Col. DUNCANSON and some privates.

"At the date of the dispatch from DAVIDSON, GREEN's brigade was pushing the enemy toward Bayou Meto."

This morning the following dispatch was received from Gen. FISK:

PINE BLUFF, Wednesday, Sept. 2.

To Major-Gen. Schofield:

A deserter from DUNSGREE's command reports that our forces attacked PRICE on the 25th at Brownsville and Bayou Meto. "Old Pap's" forces were driven back across Arkansas River on Wednesday morning. The entire rebel force was in full retreat, GREEN and DAVIDSON hotly pursuing them, and shelling the fleeing rebels. Numerous deserters report that MARMADUKE's command was wholly routed and scattered.

Little Rock was within the grasp of the Federal army.

The people of Arkansas, north of White River, are praising God for the prospective deliverance from the Jeff. Davis despotism.

C. B. FISK, Brigadier-General.

NEWSPAPER ACCOUNTS.

Correspondence of the Chicago Times.

CLARENDON, Ark., Tuesday, Aug. 25, 1863.

The Confederates are fortifying at Bayou Meto, about fifteen miles this side of Little Rock. The point is one of many advantages, and, if well fortified and desperately defended, will prove a hard place to take. The bayou is about the extreme western limit of the "Grand Prairie," which stretches down the White to the Arkansas River. It is some fifty feet wide, has abrupt banks and a treacherous sand miry bed. The rebel position is said to be flanked by swamps, which will prevent its being turned, and compel Gen. STEELE to approach it from where they have from twenty to thirty pieces of artillery ready to place in position upon the completion of their works.

THE FEDERALS CROSSING TO THE WEST SIDE OF WHITE RIVER.

Gen. STEELE is anxious to make the attack at the earliest practicable moment, in order that the entire Louisiana army of Kirby Smith cannot arrive in time to share in the defence. Since my last he has been busily engaged in crossing his troops and trains to the west side of White River, employing the flotilla and ferry facilities which are at his command. He will give it White River, Gen. STEELE will push forward with the utmost rapidity toward the rebel position.

DEMORALIZED STATE OF THE REBELS.

Deserters and prisoners represent the rebel army as in the most deplorable demoralization, and so near upon the point of mutiny that their officers are obliged to offer battle in order to prevent it. The men realize that being marched around the country and continually falling upon the opposing forces of the Federal troops is bringing their service no benefit, and they demand the privilege of fighting, in order that a result of some kind may be reached. If they are anxious to turn a little guerrilla, I know of several thousand brave boys who are ambitious of accommodating them, and, if their officers will allow them to stay where they are, will not be very slow about it either.

A SERIOUS DIVERSION RECONSIDERED.

On advices from the west side of White River in which the rebels are said to be large bodies of troops, Gen. STEELE ordered Gen. DAVIDSON to cross the river, and, by feigning an attack on Little Rock, compel Kirby Smith to detach a portion of his forces to the defense of the place. But, realizing the difficulty of retreating, should it be necessary, in the face of 5,000 cavalry, every member of which is in their interests. Upon the west bank of this bayou, which, by the way, is about 40 feet wide, and contains eight feet of water, the rebels had a double line of admirably constructed rifle-pits. Then will answer a splendid purpose for the force Gen. STEELE leaves behind him when he advances.

DUVAL'S BLUFF, ARK., Sunday, Aug. 23.

A CHANGE OF BASE.

Clarendon was evacuated at daylight this morning, and the whole of STEELE's command, not already on the march, moved to this place, which has been selected as the future base of operations against Little Rock. The supplies and the sick were moved by steamers, under the convoy of the gunboat fleet, commanded by Capt. BAILEY, the senior officer of this division.

ADVANTAGES OF THE NEW LOCATION.

Duval's Bluff has many advantages in its favor as Clarendon and disadvantages against it. It is a high and dry location, where, if anywhere in this region, the sick can have the benefit of pure air. It is admirably adapted for the location of an intrenched camp, and, with but few additions to its natural defences, can be held by a comparatively insignificant force. It is, and fifteen miles nearer the field of Gen. STEELE's operations than Clarendon, giving him the advantage of two days (one each way) in communicating with his base and receiving his supplies. Another advantage it gives us, which may determine the success of the expedition, is found in the country over which our forces will be required to march, and the natural defences of the points which they will be compelled to fight. If desperately defended by a force of 20,000 men, Little Rock can be approached upon the Clarendon and Helena road alone by any force we can bring against it. The crossing of Bayou Meto is a tremendous and strong defence, and is already well fortified. After forcing a passage, however, the rebels would fall back upon points which our troops would find still more difficult to carry. At one point, Willow Pond skirts the road for six miles, and at two points within that distance swamps approach to within half a mile of the opposite side of the road. One of these places could be made impregnable, and kept by a handful of men until starvation compelled them to surrender. The road crosses a deep bayou running from a lake, some half a mile distant, to Willow Pond. This position has a swamp in the rear, which would prevent all possibility of an assault in rear or upon either flank. If defended as, of our enemy, it undoubtedly would be, by an advance on the Clarendon road, would be purchased at an enormous sacrifice of life. Upon the Duval's Bluff road there is not a single position of extraordinary natural strength, save that one at Bayou Meto, of which I have before written. My information concerning the nature of the country I deem reliable, as it comes from Lieut. FARR, Engineer on Gen. STEELE's Staff, who has accompanied me with an accurate map of that region, made up from the field-book of the original surveyors in the Surveyor-General's office.

THE LOCATION OF OUR ADVANCE.

Gen. J. W. DAVIDSON's cavalry division occupied Gainesville, two miles west of Bear Creek, and Mud Lake, some twelve miles from this point. A reconnoitering party was made to-day as far as Brownsville, which is within twelve miles of Bayou Meto. No intelligence concerning it has been received as yet at headquarters.

THE FORWARD MOVEMENT.

Gen. STEELE will push forward with the remainder of his forces as soon as the proper intrenchments for the defense of this point have been constructed. They will require but a few days, as the location is naturally very strong. The reinforcements promised him from Memphis by Gen. HURLBUT have not been received, and it is now a matter of grave doubt whether they have been sent. Each hour's delay adds to the strength of the enemy and their position, and Gen. STEELE will not wait for reinforcements. In the coming battle there can be no doubt but what our forces will be opposed by a force equal to, if not superior in strength, posted behind fortifications, upon ground of their own selection. If a repulse should follow our attack, it can only be attributed to the small force opposed to Gen. STEELE's command, and the failure of the promised officers to forward reinforcements when ordered.

[illegible] of the largely superior force by which he is opposed.

Correspondence of the Chicago Evening Journal.

DUVAL'S BLUFF, ARK., Thursday, Aug. 27, 1863.

Everything connected with this expedition is progressing favorably. Extensive preparations are being made for the accommodation of the sick, many of whom are returning to duty.

This place is being fortified by substantial rifle-pits; and, with the assistance of a gunboat, the command can easily protect the hospitals and stores. The fortifications were commenced under the direction of Lieut. FARRAND, Engineer, on Gen. STEELE's Staff, and do credit to the skill of the officer.

Gen. DAVIDSON had a skirmish with the enemy on the 25th, near Brownsville, driving them and occupying the place. He fell back ten miles, however, on account of the scarcity of water.

A growing disposition on the part of the citizens to return to their allegiance is daily manifested in a practical manner, and is on the increase. Many families are also going northward, the Government purchasing the stock of unshakably loyal persons in all such cases.

A squad of prisoners, including Col. DUNSGREE, (acting rebel Brigadier,) was started up the river to-day in charge of competent guards.

No movement from this place will take place for a week, yet not anything to the contrary you need place no credence in. Reports can be expected to the immense amount of nonsense in circulation, the offspring of the disordered imaginations of those who are the feeble news-mongers of reasonable and consistent data meets.

THE OCCUPATION OF BROWNSVILLE.

HEADQUARTERS ARKANSAS EXPEDITION, DUVAL'S BLUFF, ARK., Wednesday, Aug. 26.

There were 40 in hospital when we came, and some pieces of artillery in the place previous to the occupation of Brownsville by Gen. DAVIDSON's advance on Monday evening. Our batteries opened upon the town with shell as daylight yesterday. The rebels fired a few shots in response, and evacuated the place. The batteries remaining in the old position, from a mile and one-fourth to two miles, then the roads back of the town, while a portion of our forces occupied the place.

Col. JOHN BOWMAN, of the Fourth Missouri rebel cavalry, whose regiment was in Brownsville, spent the night with his family, eight miles north of the place. The firing was the first intimation he had of the presence of our troops, and he immediately started to join his command. As he neared Brownsville he noticed that our batteries were outside of the town, and presuming that, of course, the place was still occupied by MARMADUKE, galloped in. Some of his men were also the captures Federal informed, and the presence of blue coats did not trouble him in the least. He was in the place some fifteen minutes before he was observed by our men, and did not find out his mistake until called upon to dismount.

Col. BOWMAN, formerly resided at Louisiana, Pike County, Missouri, and is a brother of Clement Bowman, now a prisoner at St. Louis or Alton. He informs me that Gen. HEATH is not dead, as reported, but is now convalescing at White Springs. Our forces followed the rebels to within four miles of Bayou Meto, and then returned to Brownsville on account of water. The intermediate bayous will be completed in a couple of days, when we may reasonably look for an advance of Gen. STEELE's whole force.

GEN. BLUNT'S MOVEMENTS.

Correspondence of the Leavenworth Conservative.

FORT BLUNT, C. N. INDIAN TERRITORY, Wednesday, Aug. 19, 1863.

We are under marching orders at last. Find enough to think that to-morrow we shall be south of the Arkansas. The Choctaws, long ago, was called the "White Man's Graveyard," and abscinded by the Government because of its unhealthiness.

All of us are "gay and happy still." Gen. STEELE, with ragged rebel scores, has fallen back. He is now forty miles from here, southeast, on some creek with an unpronounceable name. His forces are now estimated at 7,000, the Indians mostly having returned to their homes. STEELE's movements are entirely caused by the fear of getting between two fires, for we hear of Gen. STEELE and DAVIDSON being on the way from the east and central portion of Arkansas. It would be inconvenient to be caught with BLUNT on his western flank.

We are all feeling good at the news that Col. CROWER and the gallant Second are marching this way. A messenger came in this morning with dispatches from him, forty miles from this post. He has with him about two thousand men—the Second Kansas, the First Arkansas, and a battalion of infantry, with two sections of Rabb's battery. Everybody looks joyous. We are willing to go to the Gulf with our present force.

Col. JUDSON is in command of the post, with a garrison of the three Indian regiments and a battalion of the "First Nigger." Gen. BLUNT's headquarters are in the village adjoining. Major CALVIN, Lieut.-Col. CAMPBELL and all the cavalry are camped on the Verdigris, to the west of us—none there for forage, the grass being all eaten off in this vicinity.

A general hospital has been established at Tal-lah-quah, on the Illinois River, twenty miles east. The National Female Seminary buildings are being used for hospital purposes. They are admirably adapted to the purpose. Our sick have all been removed there, as also all parties of our infantry.

Col. BOWMAN, of the Twelfth Iowa, is here. Major PONTIOUS, Ninth Kansas, goes North to-morrow. He has declined the Colonelcy of the Fourth Indian—cause why, the regiment is not raised. Lieut.-Col. JOHN BOWMAN, First Colored, has resigned, and gone North.

About sixty Texan and Arkansas Union refugees and deserters have lately come in. They are joining the Fourteenth Kansas. Lieut. TURNER, First Colored, has a company nearly full, for the Second Colored.

Paymasters ADAMS and BURNHAM have been with the train for Fort Scott.

The soldiers of the First Colored send up with the paymaster about $120.00 of their pay for their families at Lawrence and Leavenworth. That regiment cannot be beat. My next will doubtless be from Fort Smith.

THE MOVEMENT AGAINST MOBILE.

Franklin, Ord and Herron to be in Command Under Banks.

Correspondence of the Chicago Times.

NEW-ORLEANS, Wednesday, Aug. 19.

By the steamer Champion, for St. Louis to-day, I send you everything of importance in this quarter.

"It is everywhere asserted that the attack on Mobile will shortly be made by three corps, under the command of Gens. FRANKLIN, Ord, and Herron, the whole under the direction of Maj.-Gen. BANKS.

Gen. ORD's corps has arrived at Carrollton, above the city, and many of his troops can now be seen in the city. Gen. FRANKLIN has his headquarters at Baton Rouge, and Gen. HERRON is on the way down the river.

Most of the vessels of-war and mortar boats are said to have gone preparatory to the reduction of Fort Morgan at the mouth of Mobile harbor. Admiral FARRAGUT is said to lead the fleet.

The principal base of operations against Mobile is understood to be Pascagoula, 45 miles from the former place. The great stronghold of Alabama is expected to fall in less than three weeks.

The people by the steamer Champion assert that Gen. GRANT is on his way to assume command of this department, relieving Gen. BANKS, and that the latter General is to be recalled to Washington, there to be assigned to a important position.

The Great Rebellion from an Anagrammatic Stand-Point.

NEW-YORK, Thursday, Sept. 3, 1863.

To the Editor of the New-York Times:

I have been amusing myself by making anagrams upon the "Great Rebellion." I could not make a good English one, but succeeded in "generating" seven Latin ones, which I dedicate to the Democracy, and send to you, as follows:

In reference to Slavery—

"A Negro like late—(The universally free negro—i. e., Universal freedom to the negro.)

"Negro free now"—(The black man's three fold—i. e., three great "Lincoln" acts.)

"Negro free, great"—(The slaveholder is gladly free—i. e., from his task.)

In reference to the conduct of the war by the enemy—

"Neo gets sells"—(Neo carries on the war; or, wages war.)

In reference to the Rebellion being subsidized—

"Liber net algore"—(The freemen spins (or weaves) in the cold; or, freely translated: The cotton spinner is cut in the cold.)

In reference to the siege of Charleston—

"Liber lungs vale"—(The freemen to clear of its enemies; or navy.)

"Liber lungs arid"—(The freemen shown after siege, for the end.)

Each one of these will be found a perfect anagram, containing the same letters as those which compose the words "Great Rebellion," and not a letter more or less.

If you think that either as strange coincidences or literary curiosities they have sufficient merit or interest, please give one a place in your journal and oblige

The Wood-pile Case—Union Meeting—Military Movements—Gen. Banks's Resignation—Health of the City—Rumors About Charleston.

From Our Own Correspondent.

NEW-ORLEANS, Wednesday, Aug. 26, 1863.

THE WOOD-PILE CASE.

But little of local consequence has occurred since my last; the principal event being, perhaps, the one which forms the caption of this paragraph. The case was not, in itself, one of any great importance; but it is impossible to overestimate the feeling of dissatisfaction which the decision of Judge ROMAN has produced among the people—the taxpayers—of New-Orleans.

Rightly or wrongly, there can be no disguising that this population have got deeply impressed with the idea that the public affairs of the city are being grossly mismanaged—that officials are holding obscure positions, at great salaries, to which they are not legally entitled—and that large amounts of public wealth are being, somehow or other, spirited away, while the honest creditors of the city, men who have supplied it with their labor and their materials, have to go without their dearly-earned money.

The trial in question grew out of a letter which Mr. COLLINS, a foreman of laborers, had written to the True Delta, (in reply to an article of the latter asking what had become of a quantity of wood belonging to the city,) and asserting that he, COLLINS, had removed a portion of it to the private houses of three members of the Bureau of Streets and Landings—Messrs. DUVEZIN, CAMPBELL and ROSS—by their own request.

The three gentlemen, feeling themselves aggrieved by this grave charge, had COLLINS arraigned for libel, and employed the most eminent counsel here, Messrs. ROSELIUS and DAY, to prosecute the case; the accused being defended by Messrs. MOLLOY and COLEMAN.

I was present at the trial and must confess that all the evidence I heard seemed to prove, very clearly, that the wood was actually taken to the houses of the three Bureau gentlemen—that it was not paid for—and that the said wood was public property.

Whatever weight, however, there might have been in these simple facts against the prosecutors, seems to have been quite counteracted by, what appeared to many, a mere legal quibble; viz: that anything said or done by the members of the bureau individually, had nothing to do with the charge brought against COLLINS, of having attacked them collectively, as a bureau; and the Judge, in passing sentence upon the accused, seemed to attach very much weight to the fact that, "if the gentlemen of the bureau did receive six cords of wood, why, still he (COLLINS) was himself the greater criminal; for he had used the city carts to haul twenty loads to his own house, under his express orders."

Unsophisticated outsiders are puzzling their heads to know how two wrongs can make a right; how one man can be blameless of plunging his hand in the public crib, because another chooses to shove his in up to the elbow—supposing the Judge to be right in his conclusion about COLLINS' malfeasance. However, there stands the broad fact for the politic to make the most of. Mr. COLLINS, a poor laboring man—of blameless reputation from all I have been able to learn of him—had the audacity, in reply to a question in a newspaper, (silence respecting which from his peculiar position, would centre public suspicion on him individually,) to state out and state that, by their express request, he had sent enough wood to the houses of the aforementioned three members of the Bureau—and for that audacity Judge ROMAN has condemned him to a fine of two hundred and fifty dollars and six months in the parish prison.

But I do not think these two hundred and fifty dollars will ultimately come out of Mr. COLLINS' pocket—that he will remain six full terms in prison—or, that if he does, he will come out with a reputation, say the worst, fit only to subject there. From what I hear publicly spoken of everywhere, a subscription is being set up to far more than cover the amount of his fine and bonds; that a petition, among the taxpayers and business men of the city, to Gen. BANKS, requesting him to pardon COLLINS, the good old-fashioned redress for which his counsel pleaded in vain—is just by a jury of his countrymen. In other words, this is looked upon as a test case among the people, in which, they—rightly or wrongly is not for me to say—consider injustice has been done to them, in the person of Mr. COLLINS, a case which they look upon as forming a great dangerous precedent against any one who may hereafter dare to lift his voice against public corruption.—I am [illegible] UNION MEETING.

On the evening of Monday, the 24th, the Union Association, which had taken a vacant lot on Magazine street, opposite the old Jesuit church, and built a neat, cool, open office from Mr. THOMAS J. DUNLEY, [illegible]

The whole gist of the heated speeches was clear and logical. Statement after statement, showed how utterly impossible it is for the people of Louisiana ever to think of ever being entirely reinstated, after the rebellion, and how foolish it would be—even if it were possible—to attempt any thing which had been the cause of so much misery to the State. In taking a calm and comprehensive view of his subject, he showed, in comparison with Louisiana, the Free States of Indiana and Illinois, statistically, in how short a time Indiana, [illegible] and Illinois had, by contrast, [illegible] in population, material wealth, progress and civilization.

It is impossible to overrate the effect that such and such speeches, which this weekly assemblage of citizens is working upon the minds and consciences of the people. Many rebels, in defiance thereof, come from miles around, every Monday evening, to hear what is said. Every hearer of each speech, from Mr. DUNLEY's carries his commentary with him, and, as we see reasonable people approving, we feel that we are on the firm surface of a lake. Every rational gain with his knowledge, from such an assemblage, is form his own little circle of influence, and, by the laws of truth. A wonderful step, at this time, when many people, even among those who are the most ardent supporters of the Union, cannot see, and hold to the Union and enlightened addresses which are [illegible]

MILITARY MOVEMENTS.

The rumors of troops shipped, some days, and the activity caused by the chartering of vessels by the Quartermaster, indicate, all go to prove that, sooner or later, we shall take wheels, we are. Now, where or where the next blow is to be struck, is a question I am willing to admit, although I feel, from what I know, I ought to be able to answer it. Suffice it, however, that the rebels are not aware of the fact that they are to be struck, at all, and, if they are, they are not sufficiently on their guard to be able to make a stand against us. Rosecrans, Meade, Banks, seem each, within a month, to have taken the rebels by surprise, and, if we can, we must do the same. Rosecrans is in the mountains, Meade in the open country, Banks in the swamps—everywhere, through spasmodic intelligence, we learn that the rebels have to be on their guard. Rosecrans, Meade, Banks, are all, in a measure, in the same position, so far as the rebels are concerned

THE REBEL BATTLE REPORTS.

OFFICIAL REPORTS OF BATTLES. Published by Order of Congress. 8vo. pp. 624. Republished in New-York by G. B. Richardson.

This is a volume of extraordinary interest, being nothing less than the rebel official statements of battles, for the account of which we have heretofore had to rely upon the reports of our own officers and of newspaper correspondents. It is [illegible] in spirit, [illegible] they were written only on one side, with [illegible] Gen. Beauregard's account of the battles of Manassas. It is full of injury to individual reputations. He states that "the Federal army numbered 60,000 men, fifteen regiments of regular infantry, one of marines, three of regular cavalry, and twelve hundred, 110 guns;" and, strange enough, gives the number to embarrass him, making allowances for flight and desertion, the Federal force impossible to be at least 40,000 thousand men. His own force he states to have been 32,000 thousand men. He does not distinctly state how much of this force actually participated in the conflict; but nearly all most have done so, since he virtually admits that it was the arrival of Jamieson's column in the afternoon, by railroad, that decided the fortunes of the day. Now, we have Gen. McDowell's statement in his official report that "he crossed Bull Run with about 18,000 men, of all arms." Gen. McDowell does not attempt to specify the number of his adversary; but after a general description says: "What all this amounted to, I cannot say, certainly much more than we anticipated. Gen. Beauregard's own statement proves this. There was a difference of at least ten of twelve thousand in favor of the Confederate forces. Beauregard states that he had fifty-four guns, and that we had one hundred and nineteen. Major Barry, Chief of Artillery under McDowell, in his report, states that "the whole force of artillery of all calibres was 49 pieces, of which 28 were rifled guns," and he gives a particular specification of the different batteries. He states that of these 49 pieces only 24 actually crossed Bull Run to the battle-field. The rest were held in reserve. Beauregard, therefore, enormously exaggerates the real fact. Taking his statement of his own artillery strength, it seems that he had only three pieces than our army, including our reserves, and 31 pieces apart from that reserve.

In respect to the results, Beauregard is fully more serious. He states his own killed as here given, his wounded "[illegible] making his aggregate of 1,982. Of our loss he says: "The official reports of the enemy are stubbornly silent on this point, but will afford a data for an approximate estimate." He then goes into a long computation, from imaginary data, and concludes: "We are warranted in placing the entire loss of the Federal army, forty-five hundred in killed, wounded and prisoners." It was false that our official reports were silent on this point. Gen. McDowell's report, dated three weeks previous to that of Beauregard, stated as follows:

"Our officer killed amounted to 19 officers and 460 non-commissioned officers and privates, and our wounded to 64 officers and 97 non-commissioned officers and privates. Many of the wounded will soon be able to join the ranks, and will leave our total of killed and disabled from further service nearly one thousand."

Beauregard's report is chiefly valuable for what it admits or implies against himself. The number of Federal prisoners taken at Bull Run is known to have been about 1,500. Therefore, Beauregard, in stating our number of killed, wounded and prisoners at over 4,500, exaggerates by over 1,500. He admits that his own killed and wounded were 1,982; Gen. McDowell states his own killed and wounded at 1,482; taking these figures to be correct, the rebels lost 500 more in killed and wounded than the defenders of the Union. Beauregard avows that it was a fight "dearly won by the death of many officers and men of inestimable value belonging to all grades of our society;" and well may he. It was, in truth, dearly won. With all his boldness of statement, he does not deny that his lines were driven back, and kept back until the reinforcements arrived in the afternoon. He makes no concealment of "the extraordinary panic which disbanded and the entire Federal army for the time;" and he concedes that his own army "was not in a condition for the 'coup' of an eager effective pursuit of the enemy immediately after the battle."

Let us pass on to other rebel representations in other fields.

Brig.-Gen. Tilghman bitterly complains of the disability displayed in the choice of the site of Fort Henry, on the Cumberland River, which fell so soon under his command. He says:

"To understand properly the difficulties of my position, it is right that I should explain fully the unfortunate location of Fort Henry. It is intended to resist attack by a small force against an attack by land and bombardment with the gunboats, as well as its distinct object is over an engagement with boats alone. The fort is a quadrilateral, with bastions at the angles, and is situated from three of these angles on the opposite shore, within close proximity, the eastern bank completely commanding both fort and its outer defensive range. At the same time the intervening ground, at least as it was in the best possible manner to meet the case, was two-thirds of it completely under the control of the fire of the gunboats. The history of a military expedition against Fort Donelson is that Fort Donelson, with a few miles of intervening ground, is a fortification of a very different character, and is designed to resist a land attack, and a location fixed upon without current engineering science, or taking care of the many requirements of a site for a work such as Fort Henry. The work itself was well built; it was completed long before I took command, but strengthened greatly by myself in building embrasures and traverses of sandbags. An enemy had but to use their most ordinary skill to secure the advantage of high ground, as was the case, to have a marked superiority of the position." I am guilty of no act of injustice in this frank avowal of the difficulties entailed by myself, as well as by all other officers who have become familiar with the position of Fort Henry. Not do I desire the defects of location to have an undue influence in directing public opinion to a careless or cool battle of the 6th instant. The fort was built when I took charge, and I had no time to build anew."

Brig.-Gen. Pillow, of Mexican dish memory, in his report on the fall of Fort Donelson, says of that fortification:

"The selection for the site of the work was an unfortunate one. Were an enemy at the time of the fort, favorable, the site was commanded by the heights above and below the river, and by a confined range of hills all around the water in its rear. A date range, very economical dimensions had been constructed for the purpose, and the battery, but the fort itself were commanded by the hills already referred to, and exposed to a close of cultivated from every direction against from an hill below."—[illegible] military engineer.

Gen. Buckner, who surrendered the fort, after Gen. Pillow, in his report, says that "the fire of the enemy was so hot and fatal that it became impossible to man the guns." Gen. Pillow, in his report, gives the following account of the surrender, showing that the first concern of his subordinates was for their personal safety:

"Shortly after I had left the fort, I received a note from Gen. Buckner, in which he informed me that the fire of the enemy was so hot and fatal that it became impossible to man the guns, and that the position was untenable. I had ordered Gen. Floyd to place his command in readiness to attack the enemy's rear, and had sent Colonel Baldwin to assist in the fort, when Gen. Floyd informed me that he had received a note from Gen. Buckner, stating that the fort was untenable, and that he was about to surrender. I then sent Gen. Floyd to inform Gen. Buckner that I had ordered a diversion to be made in his rear, and that he must hold the fort for a few hours longer, when I should be able to cut my way out. Gen. Floyd returned and informed me that Gen. Buckner had already hoisted the white flag, and that the fire was so hot and fatal that it was impossible to man the guns. I then sent Colonel Baldwin to the fort, with orders to bring me a full report of the condition of affairs there. He reported that the fire was very hot, and that it was impossible to man the guns, while many of the men were leaving the fort in the meantime, under arms. All this occurred as suddenly as it was unexpected.

The men were mostly drawn up under arms, and positively refused to fight any longer, besides endeavoring by force to wring over the St. Mary's cannon, and each other few men as remained true to their cause and country. The multitude stated that the officers intended to hold out as long as possible, or until the proposed relief, and then blow up the fort, as was everything in them that the city had remained, and that there was no further use in fighting; that the enemy were about to attack by land and water, on three sides at once, and that a longer defence would only prove a butchery. Every effort was made by the officers to repress the revolt, and to bring the men to reason and order, but without avail. Officers upon the ramparts were fired upon by the mutineers, in attempting to put a stop to the firing of the white flag.

I am greatly indebted to Rev. Fathers Nauson for his efforts to quell the mutineers, through some of whom he learned that the revolt had been discussed among them for two days, and yet there was no one man true enough to communicate the fact to his officers. Signals also were said to have been passed between the fort during the night, and while the mutiny was at its height. Being so general among the men, the officers were helpless and powerless to act. Under these circumstances, there was but one course left, viz., to let those men go who wished to leave the fort, in order to see the number left, and to ascertain what reliance could be placed upon them. About one-half of the garrison left immediately, including men from every company, excepting the St. Mary's cannoneers, volunteers and regulars, non-commissioned officers and privates, and among them many of the very men who had stood last and best to their guns throughout the protracted bombardment. And the final action when the enemy passed. It was soon evident that there was no fight in the men remaining behind, that they were completely demoralized, and that no faith or reliance could be placed in the broken detachments of companies left in the fort.

In the mean time, we were totally ignorant of the condition of affairs in Fort St. Philip, and, as all of our small boats had been carried away by the mutineers, we could not communicate with that fort till next morning. As the next attack upon the forts was likely to be a combined contraction by land and water, and as Fort St. Philip was the point most immediate from the nature of the country around it, and from the character of the work itself, with narrow and shallow ditches, and but little relief to the main work, it was self-evident that no resistance could be made in its garrison in the emergency that had befallen us. All this occurred on the morning of the 26th, and on the 27th, when there was no other excitement in arms than the fatigue duty of removing our damages, and when the rumor was current that the city had surrendered, and was in the hands of the enemy. No reply had been received from the city to my dispatches sent by courier on the 25th and 26th, by means of which I could measure time. They are still obedient, but not buoyant and elastic. In consequence, I endeavored to revive their courage and patriotism, by publishing an order to both garrisons, attached hereto as document E. I regret to state that it did not produce the desired effect. Everything remained quiet, however, until midnight, when the garrison at Fort Jackson revolted en masse, cabed upon the guard, and pursued, rescued the detachment commanding the guns, and completely spike the guns, while many of the men were leaving the fort in the meantime, under arms. All this occurred as suddenly as it was unexpected.

The men were mostly drawn up under arms, and positively refused to fight any longer, besides endeavoring by force to wring over the St. Mary's cannoneers, and each other few men as remained true to their cause and country. NEWS OF THE DAY.

THE REBELLION.

A dispatch from Gen. ROSECRANS' army, dated the 2d inst., states that the army was then well across the Tennessee, and occupied a strong position several miles south of the river, no resistance to the crossing having been shown by the rebels. Reconnoissances to Treaton, Ga., had failed to discover any rebels, and the report was that they were intrenched to the eastward of Chattanooga.

A correspondent with the Army of the Cumberland in a recent letter, gives additional and most interesting evidence on the subject of discontent in the South, both in and out of the rebel armies. Desertion is no longer confined to solitary individuals, but large masses of men only wait for an opportunity to quit a service which they loathe. From reliable information it would appear that 5,000 men have taken refuge in the mountains of Georgia alone, successfully resisting all the force that the authorities can bring against them. As every man the Confederates can raise is needed to oppose our troops, it will be well nigh impossible for them to disperse the refugees, whose numbers will continue to increase as the cause of the Confederacy becomes more desperate.

An official dispatch from Admiral DAHLGREN was received by the Navy Department yesterday. The Admiral reports that the siege of Charleston was going on satisfactorily. The Monitors were standing fire well, although the rebels had raised upon them a tempest of shot and shell. Admiral DAHLGREN's dispatch makes no mention of the illness under which he has been reported to be laboring.

A gentleman at Vicksburgh writes a private letter to the St. Louis News, to the effect that the negro regiments now in process of organization down the river are being filled up very rapidly. He thinks about fifty of these regiments will be ready for service by the 1st of October. He gives it as his opinion, formed from what he has seen of these sable soldiers, and the spirit with which they enlist, that they will be a very efficient element in the service.

By a private letter received in St. Louis from Natchez, Mississippi, we are informed that the Thirteenth army corps of Gen. GRANT's army has gone to New-Orleans, and been assigned to duty under Gen. BANKS. The Seventeenth corps, commanded by Gen. McPHERSON, is at Natchez, camped on high, healthy ground, and expecting to move at an early day. New-Orleans is evidently to be the base of an important movement.

Dispatches from Washington to the Philadelphia Inquirer state that deserters from the rebel army, arriving at headquarters, report that the preparations of Lee's army indicated another attempt to invade Maryland early this Autumn. It was freely talked of in the rebel army, by both officers and men, who looked forward to the time when an attempt would be made to replenish their scanty supplies from Maryland and Pennsylvania; as the part of Virginia they are now in is completely cleaned out of everything calculated to satisfy man and beast. If they are obliged to spend another Winter in such a barren locality they will suffer terribly.

A letter from Mr. EDWARD BURTSON, of Newark, N. J., dated on board the steamer Vanderbilt, July 24, was received by his father in that city on Friday. The vessel at that time was at Rio Janeiro, and the letter makes no mention of the fight reported by the rebel journals. All on board were well and in good spirits.

GENERAL NEWS.

The Board of Councilmen met specially at noon yesterday, and passed the $3,000,000 exemption ordinance over the Mayor's veto by a unanimous vote, twenty-one members being present, and three—Messrs. BRICK, COOK and JOYCE—were recorded in the affirmative by permission of the Board, in pursuance of their request, made through Messrs. HAYES and BRADLEY. There was no debate on the question. Mr. GROSS and talk was unnecessary—the people understood the matter well. Mr. BRANDON explained his vote, saying that he had voted against the pledge to overrule the Mayor's veto, because he thought it was unnecessary to make the pledge; but he had been in favor of the ordinance from the first. The Mayor sent in a message vetoing the resolution directing the Street Commissioner "to take such measures as may be necessary to cause the immediate removal of the artillery and cavalry from all the squares, parks and other public places belonging to the City." The Mayor says the correspondence between Gov. SEYMOUR and Gen. DIX, recently published, demonstrates the necessity for the presence of the troops to insure the peaceful enforcement of the draft; that Gen. DIX proposed to leave this duty to the military power of the State, but the Governor refused, stating that "under no circumstances could the State authorities perform duties expressly confided to others." The Mayor continues: "Inasmuch, therefore, as the enforcement of the act, one of the supreme laws of the land, was left to others, we cannot justly find fault with those others for their presence here. * * * especially in view of the fact that they have saved our City from another disgraceful outbreak." The Mayor concludes by saying that "the necessity for the presence of the troops is not temporary and will soon be past. So long as they are here, we have no other choice to suitable for their accommodation as the public grounds which they now occupy." The Board adjourned to the 14th inst.

The gun-press steamer Cromwell, recently captured while running out of Wilmington, N. C., is unloading in Boston. She had a cargo of four hundred bales of cotton, and in addition a large quantity not packed. There was also turpentine and tobacco on board. The steamer is of three hundred or four hundred tons, but having very small engines, &c., possesses a large capacity for stowage. She is a slow sailer, and is worth $200,000 or $240,000. The cargo is probably worth twice $200,000.

At a recent election held at Fort Gibson, Hon. JOHN ROSS was reelected principal Chief of the Cherokee Nation for the term of four years, and SAMUEL DOWNING, Lieutenant-Colonel of the Third Cherokee Indian regiment United States, was elected Second Chief for the same period.

Breadstuffs were less active on Saturday. Flour and Wheat were cheaper. Corn was somewhat firmer. Provisions were in fair demand, as were Groceries. Hay, Hops, Tallow, Tobacco, Wool, Mackerel, Herring, Sugars, and Coffee. Cotton was in moderate request. Freights were quiet, with 606 vessels of all classes in port. Other branches of trade were essentially unaltered.

The "Copperhead" Party.

Once upon a time, as Æsop tells the story, a child was seen making a journey, mounted upon an ass, and attended by his sire on foot. The people came about the old gentleman and resolved themselves into a "public meeting." They reproached him bitterly for taking his seat upon an ass while his tender son trudged in the dust. The "laboring classes" were much excited, and the father dismounted and put his son upon the animal. This only seemed to make matters worse, and volleys of abuse were launched at the unfortunate party because the hale and robust youth rode and the father walked. To meet this new objection the father and son both rode. This change of base, instead of satisfying the crowd, only made them more outrageous. They denounced the arrangement as a gross imposition upon the ass, and perhaps called it "unconstitutional." The old gentleman and his son had but one recourse left. They took the jackass upon their shoulders and departed in peace.

There is a good deal of human nature in mankind, though DEAN SWIFT always insisted that human nature did not include French nature. If the motives and instincts of "the Copperheads" can be called one of the varieties of human nature, it would seem that it has remained much the same since the time of Æsop. The real Copperhead is satisfied with nothing short of an absurdity. He is delighted to see the man carry the jackass, for he concludes that such an excursion will come to a speedy end.

Since this war commenced a certain class of persons among us have spent their whole time in blaming the Government for anything which it did and for everything which it failed to do. They have been as hard to please as the old Greeks were.

They hold public meetings in which they proclaim at the top of their voices that they have been deprived of the right of free speech, and they defy in the most violent manner the tyrants who have silenced them. They publish newspapers, in which they rave about the restraints which "LINCOLN's Government" has put upon the Press, and they threaten unutterable horrors if such outrages are continued. They offer to lay down their lives in defence of their wives and children, and seem to be particularly afflicted because they are not attacked. They say that the whole management of public affairs is only a series of blunders; nothing is done right.

They have in turn denounced every measure of the Government as clearly unconstitutional, besides being inhuman and decidedly stupid. They said that the negro would fight for his master, and that he would not fight at all; that he could not be driven to harm his master, and that he would burn, slay and ravish. They have constantly asserted that the war was ruining the North, and making everything worthless, and that it caused such an increase of all kinds of business here, that a large part of our population were interested in having it never end. When gold ran up, they cried out, "rags for currency," and when gold fell, they said that all the traders would fail, and the whole community become insolvent.

When we attempted to replenish our armies by volunteer enlistments, they exclaimed, why not draft men evenly? why cast all the burden upon those who volunteer to serve the country, and thus throw it all off upon the Democrats, inasmuch as none but Democrats have taken up arms? When a draft is proposed, they denounce it as an hoard of outrage; say that the "Saxon race" have never been drafted and never will be. It is an infraction of all kind of rights, and in violation of all of the Constitutions in the country, State, National and physiological.

In July last the draft was commenced, and for three or four days the Copperheads had their "peace meetings" at various places in the City, and took some pains to convince the Government that it was not strong enough to make the draft. Some public functionaries came forward and assured the officers who attempted to disperse these rioters that there was no disturbance except what these officers made, and requested them to retire and not excite "the laboring classes." The Governor himself seemed to think that his "friends" were in the right on the general merits of the question, but were technically wrong in breaking heads. Judge McCUNN doubtless thought it safer to use the habeas corpus than a crowbar for general jail delivery, and for a time he signalized the correctness of his judgment in that particular.

In short, the mob stopped the draft, and then the better dressed Copperheads—who had during that week of murder, arson and outrage, been smiling and complacent, "looking as if they had heard good news"—united in denouncing the great blunder which the Government had committed in not having a force at hand large enough to maintain order. It was doubtless a mistake. The Government did not suppose that New-York City, with a Democratic Government and municipal officers to manage its affairs, needed national troops to prevent general pillage and massacre. But it took the lesson.

Gen. DIX asked Gov. SEYMOUR to assume the control of the forces, and secure the peace of the City in completing the draft. The Governor equivocated, said perhaps the draft will not be made, and would not say what he would do, but intimated that he would wash his hands of the whole matter. So Gen. DIX ordered in a few regiments, and set about completing the draft. These regiments were the noble men who had faced death on unnumbered fields of battle which will be memorable in our annals—most of them volunteers—not a man of them mean enough to be a Copperhead. They encamped upon the grass in the same public square where Gov. SEYMOUR's friends had "gone a-guzzling for Abolitionists" and barbecued negroes, and it created a shivering deterrent of our public places. The malcontent Aldermen received that the Street Commissioner clear away these nuisances—drive them with his brooms out of the City. When to hoot and groan at the Express and other kindred papers cried, from day to day, "Federal bayonets!" "Tyrant!" "Tyranny!" "Woe, woe, woe!" "Why are not these men in Virginia?" "Why is New-York occupied?" &c., &c.

Fortunately the Government does not feel inclined to follow the example of the man who carried a jackass upon his shoulder to please the whims of a mob. The draft has been made, and if the traitors denounce it, they only do what they have done from the beginning. They have opposed everything, and they have succeeded in nothing, except giving up our City to a week of anarchy.

The Return of Barbarism.

Through all the struggle which went on for years between civilization and barbarism for the possession of this land of ours, there was no part of the country where the contest was fiercer than in Kentucky. It was there that barbarism made its most determined stand, and the terrible scars of the conflict long remained indelibly impressed upon the hearts and souls of her people. The name of "The Dark and Bloody Ground" which is left written upon her plains and valleys was to the children of this and of the past generation, a name associated with whatever of horror, of savage cruelty, of bloodthirsty destruction can characterize Indian warfare. It sent a thrill over their young hearts, a thrill of terror that such things should have ever been, a thrill of rejoicing that they had passed away forever. But the scenes of olden time oft return again. The conflict of civilization and barbarism returns upon us, and we who, in boyhood shuddered over the associations of the dark and bloody ground, have lived to see them almost cast into the shade by present and actual occurrences. Says Gov. BRANLETTE, of Kentucky, in his inaugural address, "We have been overrun by invading armies and marauding bands of guerrillas, and are still likely to have them to harass us." "We should thoroughly organize, and should revive the spirit of our ancient defence, which characterized our fathers, and gave to their homes protection against a not more savage foe."

The Governor has done well to recall the old associations. In that former time of trial, it was the organization of her sons and their firm, undaunted spirit, which saved Kentucky from barbarism. It is that which will save her from it again. She has even more to arouse her to action now than then, and the comparison of the guerrillas to the red men is too favorable to the former. No tales have been told of the cruelties of the Indians which cannot be paralleled by the atrocities of guerrillas. The sacking of Lawrence will put in the shade the atrocities of Deerfield or Schenectady. Said Gen. LANE, "Think of riding down the streets, and seeing a hundred and fifty of your fellow-citizens cooked—literally cooked—on the sidewalk." And that, too, by the hands of those who claim to be civilized—yes, Chivalry! Alas, for the desecration of the name. But names make little odds. Those who fight for barbarism cannot help becoming barbarians, whatever they may call themselves.

The rebel leaders talk of carrying on a guerrilla warfare from behind "friendly trees," after the last ditch has been left behind them. They cannot succeed in it. A momentary success in it anywhere is fatal to them. QUANTRILL's success at Lawrence, if it does not result in his death, will only drive him from that section of Missouri. Their depredations in Virginia result in the leaving of guerrilla corpses suspended from trees as scarecrows, behind our cavalry's line of march. Their depredations in Kentucky will only arouse the spirit which destroyed and rooted out their red exemplars. Let the armies of the rebels once be scattered, and the popular determination will sweep away the guerrillas like dead leaves before the storm.

It is a thousand pities that those abroad who always speak of the rebels as "a brave and gallant people struggling nobly for their rights," and that those among us who call them "our deluded Southern brethren," could not be for a while brought into that actual acquaintance with them suffered by men situated as are Gov. BRANLETTE, and the people of Lawrence and a thousand others. We think they would change their tone. JEFF. DAVIS declared that if he and his men had to choose between an alliance with the Yankees or an alliance with hyenas they would prefer the hyenas. We do not doubt it, for it is plain that they would find far more of congeniality of taste and sentiment in that direction.

PIERRE TOUTANT BEAUREGARD.—We had a word to say lately about puffing rebel braggarts, showing how most of these heroes have been made out of very poor stuff; and again we have before us one of the most notable instances of the war. PIERRE TOUTANT BEAUREGARD, Lieutenant-General of the rebel army, was first introduced to the world's notice on the investment of Sumter and its few dozen men by seven thousand traitors in arms, commanded by that hero in person. At that period the Press was filled with wondrous tales of this marvelous genius. He was held up to the admiration of mankind as the condensation of heroism and skill, and we were bidden to be still and listen, and his unequaled engineer would home Spring morning, detour Sumter for breakfast, take Washington immediately after dinner, and sup at the base of Bunker Hill. We waited, and soon the echo came back from the bombarded fort; the man had opened fire upon the hungry garrison with almost twenty times their weight of metal, and forced a surrender which he knew they would have been obliged to make within a couple of days from sheer starvation. In reward for all this, he received adulation that elevated him above the gods, and the Southern Press at once hailed him as the coming man who was to overrun the North and dictate terms to the mudsills from their own cities.

The next we heard of BEAUREGARD was at Bull Run, where, by sheer ignorance and pertinacity he lost a battle which was only regained by the arrival of JOHNSTON, and ended off by lying reports to cover up his own incapacity. If, during this campaign, he had done nothing more than issue his "Beauty and Booty" proclamation, he would have commended himself to eternal fame. The powers at Richmond thought a change of air might do him good, and removed him to the West. Here he lost the battle of Shiloh, when everything was in his own hands, and sneaked away with his great army, not only to the disgust of his own men, but in that of CURE and Gen. HALLECK. After this he remained quiescent for a long while, and it was reported that the General was sick, rusticating at some Southern springs to air his reputation, and wait, like Sir Harcourt Skittles, until he could catch the speaker's eye. At last he caught it, and to show that fate has an eye for compensation, he was ordered to defend Charleston. Could anything have been more cruel? It was sending the dog back to his filthy kennel, whether he would or no. But to Charleston he went, and the world resounded with the Beauregard brag of preparation and defiance. Myriads of blacks and whites went to work upon its fortifications, and ominous reports came of iron-plated forts and wonders of engineering strength, that should laugh all Yankee mudsills to scorn, and knock Monitors into cocked hats. Charleston was impregnable. PIERRE TOUTANT BEAUREGARD was there, and the king's name was a tower of strength!

At last the mudsills came, without proclamation, without brag, but not without Parrotts, and in less time by three-quarters than it originally took the great little man to invest Sumter, the fort was battered about his lugs; and BEAUREGARD, from a safe place in the City of Charleston, was crying "Peccavi," and begging for a little time to wash out his eyes and bathe his nose, that he might be able to see, and smell his way, perhaps, out of the city he had sworn to defend until not one brick should stand upon another.

What a miserable return for all the first-rate notices showered upon a bogus hero!

England and the Suez Canal Company.

The pertinacity with which successive British Governments have sought to obstruct a commercial company, whose enterprise, if successful, would confer great benefits on mankind, and the failure of which would bring ruin on the projectors, has not been at all creditable to the character of England.

The fears of her statesmen lest this undertaking should lead, in some mysterious way, to the conversion of Egypt into a French province, and to the overthrow of the Anglo-Oriental Empire, have impelled them from the beginning to act a part in relation to the Suez Canal and its makers, unworthy the Ministers of a great nation. When they found that the vastness of the contemplated work did not prevent the subscription of capital and the organization of the Company, these veteran intriguers set about throwing all the obstacles possible in its way. During the lifetime of MOHAMMED SAID, who was fully sensible of the importance of the enterprise, and firmly devoted to its execution, English diplomats could effect little toward retarding operations; but since the death of M. DE LESSEPS' great patron, and the accession of ISMAIL to the Pashalic of Egypt, their efforts at obstruction have been attended with more success. Early in the present year, they suddenly became exceedingly alarmed at the large grants of desert territory that had been made by the deceased MOHAMMED to the "Universal Company," and perfectly horrified at the extent to which forced labor was employed on the canal. These grants of land, according to the British Ambassador at Constantinople, were an infringement on the suzerainty of the Sultan; and this employment of forced labor was affirmed by the same authority to be contrary to a certain decree which abolished the corvee throughout the empire of Abdulasis. Neither of said statements was true. Granting the use of the soil did not convey to the company any portion of the sovereign rights of the Sultan, and the employment of forced labor on the canal was not unlawful, since no such ordinance as Sir HENRY BULWER alluded to had ever been published. But the falsity of these assertions mattered not. They served to array the new Padisha and his Egyptian vassal against the "Universal Company," and this was all that the Ambassador desired. The result of that functionary's intriguing and misrepresentation quickly appeared. On the 6th of April a note was addressed by the Ottoman Government to the Pasha of Egypt, setting forth the objections of the Sultan to certain privileges and practices of M. DE LESSEPS and his partners, while about the same time the decree of the successor of MOHAMMED against the employment of forced labor on the canal was issued. The joint action of the Sultan and the Egyptian Pasha, has, in fact, placed the "Universal Suez Canal Company" in a very embarrassing situation. In consequence of the prohibition of forced labor, the undertaking had to be suspended, and the company must barter their territorial rights, for a pecuniary compensation, as well as consent to an arrangement which will insure the neutrality of the canal, ere they can resume operations. This is the more annoying to M. DE LESSEPS and his partners, as the work was progressing rapidly, and as they have abundance of capital to carry on and complete it.

But, though the position of these gentlemen is far from enviable, they might, after all, be worse off. If they do not like the terms offered by the Turk, they need not accept them. Since England is now sensible that the enterprise is feasible, she has been pleased to authorize the Sultan to buy up the whole concern, and go on with the canalization himself, so that, if the "Universal Company" prefer it, they can pull out at a profit, and leave the glory of putting a finishing hand to the undertaking to the agent of their enemy and persecutor. Rather than stoop to do this, it seems likely that they will cling to their work, and endeavor to compromise with the Turk. But if they cannot hire free laborers in Egypt, nor employ forced labor, nor import labor from Europe, they will find it somewhat difficult to recommence business, and it seems as though the scheming of England had got them into a dilemma from which only the intervention of the French Emperor can rescue them.

In her eagerness to thwart their design, England has been alike regardless of comity and consistency. The "Universal Company" have received no privileges from the Egyptian Government—have been armed by it with no powers that have not also been conferred on English companies in the Ottoman Empire. The railway from Alexandria to Suez is a purely English institution, yet forced labor was employed in its construction, and the capitalists who projected it received a grant of the land over which it runs from the late Pasha. The railway which was to connect the Mediterranean with the Persian Gulf was also an English concern, and, had it been completed, would have been over 1,200 miles in length; yet the Sultan made a grant to its projectors of all lands, woods and quarries within a certain distance of the line throughout its immense extent. We have never heard that England became panic-stricken because of lands being transferred, and forced labor employed in these instances. But if it was proper for the Pasha and the Sultan to grant land to English capitalists, and to permit the employment of forced labor on English railways, why should it be so heinous an offence to be equally liberal to the "Universal Suez Canal Company?" And it is not improbable that France will demand that this question be satisfactorily answered, ere she suffers the rights of French speculators to be any longer trampled on.

The Anglo-Maorian War.

England's third war against the Maori has been hopefully commenced. Gen. CAMERON, the present commander of the troops in New-Zealand, is evidently a soldier who knows how to deal with the native strategists. Instead of taking the field, like his predecessor, at the head of an unwieldy force, and making his approaches to the strongholds of the enemy by the process of sap and siege, he has adopted the plan of subdividing his army into small detachments, which move from place to place with celerity, and carry the pahs by storm. The efficacy of this style of action was first put to the test on the morning of the 4th of June. After the massacre at Faranaki, the Maori had thrown up earthworks at Tataraimaka, and stationed a garrison two hundred strong there. To signalize the opening of the war, and to strike terror into the foe, Gen. CAMERON determined on the surprise and capture of this work. Accordingly, 650 men, with three pieces of artillery, were ordered to leave New-Plymouth on the night of the 3d, and to proceed to the accomplishment of the enterprise. An armed steamer was also ordered to sail up the Katikava River, on which the pah stood, and to cooperate with the land forces by shelling it from the shore. The result was such as might have been anticipated. Though the Maori made a stiff defence, they were speedily overpowered and driven from their stronghold, after losing forty of their chief warriors in the struggle. Such was the first blow struck by the British in the new Maorian war. It shows that Gen. CAMERON is the "right man in the right place," and that under his leadership the white troops are pretty sure to conquer. There is, however, nothing in the capture of a rude fort and a garrison of a couple of hundred half-armed savages, by thrice their number of disciplined soldiers, aided by a battery and a vessel equipped with Armstrong guns, about which to be at all vainglorious. Yet, owing to the many reverses which the British met with in the former war, their Press is quite jubilant over this unlooked-for success, and magnify it extravagantly. But were the achievement as important as it is insignificant, no glory could accrue from it.

The war is a war of injustice on the part of the whites, and the preceding war was no less than the present one. Evidence which cannot be impugned has been suddenly brought to light, demonstrative of the truth of this. The seizure and retention of what is called the "Waitara Block" by the Government was the cause of the last New-Zealand war, and, in a great measure, of the excitement which led to that just broken out. The Maori have all along insisted that the sale of said land was invalid, and that the English or "Pakehas" had no right to it. The "Pakehas," until recently, were no less steadfast in maintaining the contrary, and actually involved themselves in two wars with the natives, rather than surrender it. But when the latter began to manifest a hostile disposition prior to the massacre at Faranaki, Gov. GORE set himself once more to investigate the matter, and succeeded at length in establishing that the colonial authorities had been throughout wrong and the Maoris right—that the "land-sellers" had no power to dispose of the "Waitara Block," and that the purchase money had never even been paid. On ascertaining the state of facts, His Excellency immediately issued a proclamation ordering the debatable territory to be restored to the aborigines, and reparation to be made them. But the proclamation appeared too late to avert hostilities, for the Maori were already in arms, and had opened the campaign with the slaughter of the soldiers. Thus, says the London Times correspondent, nine years of irritating diplomacy, a bloody and costly war, a ruined settlement, and now a new crop of evils, whose extent we cannot yet measure, have all proceeded from this obstinate persistence in wrong-doing; and after goading the natives into a second rebellion, by the denial of justice, troops are to be transported to these remote islands from Australia and India, to enable Gen. CAMERON and the Colonial Government to obliterate the remembrance of this iniquity with the blood of the injured. Such is the way in which England manages matters in New-Zealand.

Even Pavements and Steam Carriages.

To the Editor of the New-York Times:

I have read with some care Mr. J. K. FINNEY's recent letter on City Conditions. Possibly I may be unbearable in assuming that he had some particular interest in view. ("Nothing like humor," says the author in the Saloon.) Possibly, also, my want of scientific knowledge may hinder me from properly appreciating his statistics and calculations. However, as it is the privilege of ignorance to ask questions, and the price of wise men to answer them, I wish to put a few queries to Mr. FINNEY.

1. Mr. F. says: "Pavements as firm as stone wears eight times as fast as iron on iron, it is probable that shoe leathers with iron sidewalks would make much longer time on stone." The proposition may be plausible or true, but its probability does not follow from anything in the premises or context. A non-theological constancy is not to be found in all Judge WAYNEMIRE's sayest on the draft. Shoe leather does not come under any recognized variety of iron, nor has it any marked analogy with that metal. The quantity of iron is most there in earth, but the part of the shoe defended by iron is not necessarily that which wears out the soonest. But this is merely an opinion. What I want to know respecting Mr. F.'s proposed iron sidewalks is: First—Might they not in various states of weather become so slippery that our Gothamite pedestrians would have to do more sliding without choice than they would relish? Secondly—Would the friction of shoe leather be sufficient to preserve the iron in all weathers from rust? If not, how are they to be protected without interfering with their vaunted smoothness, or is that one of his secrets? Thirdly—Would not the iron sidewalks be very noisy? The iron in a boot, though not there in large quantity, is sufficient to make considerable noise on other iron—much more, I should think, than on stone. It seems to me that an iron-floored Broadway, under the heels of its spring pedestrians, would make an "effect" beyond any chorus in MAYBRICK, WEBER or JULLIEN.

2. As to the middle of the streets. Am I correct in assuming that Mr. F. wishes to banish horses altogether from the City limits? The whole tenor of his communication, as well as several particular passages in it, I am unable to construe otherwise, and most certainly, I do not deem the man a benefactor who would put down one of the few innocent and healthy amusements to be found in our City and country. Of course, if horses cannot walk on the iron pavement, every man who wishes to keep a horse must live out of town, or, at least, move his stable out of town. The present tramway system is disgusting enough to carriage owners, but this is, indeed, a lower deep opening in the lowest. Or, am I mistaken, and has Mr. FINNEY (he seems to be a man of many inventions) some secret for shoeing horses which will enable them to go out of and come into an iron-floored city?

3. If "the union of self-propelling vehicles and iron floors smooth as railways," is "the true system applicable to all kinds of traffic," every carman and expressman must have his steam dray. (I can extract no other inference from the above passage.) Mr. F. dwells on the "slight noise" of his system. Would the noise be slight while all these vehicles (in some streets one before every house) were stationary and blowing off steam? Or, has he also a secret to make that operation noiseless?

4. It is notorious that the natural heat of our streets is increased by the artificial heat from cooking, &c. Would not a still further addition be made to this artificial heat by the continual circulation and stoppage of multitudes of steam vehicles, and what would be the consequence during our summers, already scarcely tolerable?

When Mr. FINNEY shall have answered these questions, I have a few more to ask him.

LEMOY, Sept. 1. C. A. BRISTED.

The Conscription.

To the Editor of the New-York Times:

As the draft appears to attract the attention of so large a portion of the community at present, I, as one interested, am constrained to address you in reference to the much-abused and so-called "Conscription act." At a special meeting of the Board of Supervisors of this county, there was passed an "ordinance" to provide for the procurement of substitutes for certain citizens of the City and County of New-York who have been or may hereafter be drafted to serve in the army of the Union during the existing war and for other purposes. With reference to the exemptions, the Mayor concurring, "the Board of Supervisors of the County of New-York do ordain as follows, section 1, for the purpose of preventing the withdrawal, &c., &c., &c.," that the following shall be exempt:

1. The active members of the Fire Department who were such on the 10th day of the present month of August.

2. The exempt members of the Fire Department who perform active duty in the said Department.

3. The regular members of the Metropolitan Police force resident in and doing duty in this county.

4. The regular members of the active Militia force of the State and City.

Now in order to equalize the distribution of prizes in the national lottery, and bring the "ordinance" within the bounds of reason, is not a modification of the foregoing sweeping distinction essentially requisite at this particular juncture? Let us examine some of the peculiarities of the "ordinance," for it appears to be subject to freaks as well as the wheel. The Police force, (of whose "activity" the ordinance is ominously reticent,) should by all means be exempted. Their services are liable at any and all seasons to be called into requisition. They are the true guardians of the peace of the City, as reference to the late riots will amply testify, but why abstract from the wheel the names of the members of the Fire Department and its active exempts, together with the State Militia? Why rob the Government of the valuable services of some of their separate members? Are their duties of such a character as to require such an wholesale discrimination? Have the ranks of either of the above organizations suffered such a depletion from the recent draft as to occasion their complete disorganization? Not by any means. Few probably of those drafted will eventually go into the army, nevertheless the color of their "greenbacks" will prove just as acceptable to Uncle Sam in the future as now. Let Gov. SEYMOUR, who is such a stickler for justice, see that the militia perform "active duty." I witnessed a parade of the Twenty-second regiment a few evenings since, and after the members had been dismissed I became engaged in conversation with one of them, who informed me that "Not one quarter of the men were on duty." I asked where they were, and how many were required at a time to rendezvous at the armory. The reply was that "Half the regiment were requested, but the members, a good portion, had business matters to attend to, and did not report themselves." I asked again if there were no penalties imposed for non-attendance. The answer was, "There were, but they would be able to make that all right at the Court-martial if they could bring a good excuse." There no doubt are the regulations of the entire force. What protection to the City is the First division when its members are engaged in their daily avocations—perhaps on the Stock Exchange, others in the various "club-houses!" The undersigned fortunately has escaped the draft hitherto, but as he is able physically, but unable pecuniarily to resist its consummation on his liberties, he would advocate most earnestly that when the wheel again revolves, a few names from the Fire Department and militia may be added to equalize the chances of all such as are liable to become CONSCRIPTS.

Fired Scorch.

UNITED STATES GENERAL HOSPITAL, ANNAPOLIS, MD., Wednesday, Aug. 26, 1863.

To the Editor of the New-York Times:

I am desirous of information as to what is understood by free speech. Do we mean that a person can blaspheme his God and scow eternal vengeance upon His people? Do we understand by free speech that a man can address an assembly of citizens to the effect that our Government and its institutions are plagued with despotism and tyranny, and advise them to forcibly resist the established laws of our land, and to assist under that the constituted authorities?

I am a Democrat of the Douglas school, but, judging from the speech of Gen. BURNSIDE, delivered at Columbus, Ohio, on the 19th inst., if I was ever ashamed of the time-honored name of Democrat, it is this moment. If I was ever indignant at its misuse, or ill-willed toward a coward-

NEWS FROM WASHINGTON.

WASHINGTON, Saturday, Sept. 5.

INDIAN AFFAIRS.

C. W. THOMPSON, Esq., General Superintendent of Indian Affairs in the Northwest, arrived here yesterday. We are indebted to him for the following information:

Mr. T., under instructions from the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, left this city in April last to superintend the removal of the Winnebago and Sioux Indians from Minnesota to Usher's Landing on the Missouri River, 75 miles north of Fort Randall, Dakota Territory. The Indians were transported to the reservation with little or no difficulty, arriving there in the early part of June. The erection of agency buildings was immediately commenced, which are nearly completed, the whole being inclosed with a heavy timber stockade.

The buildings are plain, but very neat and substantial, and in every way answer the purposes for which they were constructed. A saw-mill has also been erected, which turns out about 500 feet of lumber per day, enough for all practical purposes.

As yet only about six hundred acres of land have been broken, part of which is under cultivation, and corn, potatoes, and nearly all kinds of vegetables, are being grown quite extensively; but the crop will not be so large as might be expected, owing to the lateness of the season, and the long and continued dry spell of weather which succeeded their arrival at their new homes.

The Sioux tribe take to farming naturally, and are very well satisfied with the change; but the Winnebagoes are restless and afraid of the Sioux, who have sworn vengeance against them for having killed a few of their number previous to their removal from Minnesota. The Superintendent, however, has succeeded in calming their fears to some extent.

The country along the river is described as being very fine; but in some places there is great scarcity of timber.

POSTMASTER-GENERAL BLAIR.

Postmaster-General BLAIR has returned to Washington from a visit with the Second Assistant Postmaster-General McLELLAN, but is still prostrated with sickness at his residence.

THE POTOMAC.

The Potomac flotilla reports no signs recently of rebel troops along the river.

The official orders show that the capture of the gunboats Reliance and Satellite by the rebels was owing to a disregard of instructions by the commanding officers.

THE MISSISSIPPI.

The Treasury Department is engaged in the modification of regulations for commerce on the Mississippi River.

AN ACCIDENT.

Early this week, while Mr. BARNARD, the reporter for the Associated Press with the Army of the Potomac, was attending to his duties, he was so unfortunate as to be kicked by a horse, by which his arm was injured and several ribs were broken. Mr. BARNARD, although so seriously hurt, hopes soon to be in the saddle again.

RECOGNIZED.

The President has recognized PAUL GUYE as Vice-Consul of the Swiss Confederation at St. Louis, for the States of Missouri, Illinois, Kansas and the Territory of Nebraska.

NAVAL INTELLIGENCE.

Commander BARNES is detached from the command of the Sonoma, and ordered to the command of the Neptune.

Lieut.-Commander ROE is detached from the command of the Neptune, and ordered to the command of the Sonoma.

MEN CHARGED WITH DESERTION.

WAR DEPARTMENT, ADJUTANT-GENERAL'S OFFICE, WASHINGTON, D. C., Aug. 25, 1863.

SIR: The following instructions, received from the General-in-Chief, are furnished for your information and guidance, and are to be strictly observed:

All men charged with desertion, who belong to regiments whose terms of service have expired, shall be examined by a commission of from one to three officers, detailed by the officer (not exceeding Provost-Marshals of Enrollment Districts) under whose command they may be held in confinement, with a view to ascertaining whether they are entitled to be discharged, if it should appear that their term has expired, their cases will be submitted to the Department Commander, that the penalty of desertion may be remitted without trial, under par. 116, Army Regulations, and the men sent to the mustering officer (under General Order, No. 163, of 1862) nearest the place of enrollment, to be mustered out of service.

If it appears that they should undergo punishment, or if the men cannot clear themselves of the charge, they will be assigned and sent to one of the regiments from the same State, serving in the same corps or department to which the regiments to which they formerly belonged served, for trial, or such disposition as the division, corps, or department commander may make of them, according to regulations, to serve out the time lost by desertion; the regiment to be designated by the officer who forwards them, and entered on their descriptive list, or muster and descriptive roll.

The time to be made good will be the time from the date of desertion to the date of joining the regiment to which assigned.

Provost-Marshals of Enrollment Districts will forward deserters from regiments whose terms of service have expired, in the same manner as others, with a view to carrying out the above instructions.

I have the honor to be, sir, your obedient servant,
E. D. TOWNSEND, Assistant Adjutant-General.

DIRECTIONS TO PAYMASTERS.

PAYMASTER-GENERAL'S OFFICE, WASHINGTON, D. C., Aug. 27, 1863.

The large number of Auditor's certificates for arrears of pay and bounty due deceased soldiers, now being issued, requiring additional precautions in paying them, the following rules will hereafter be observed by all officers of this Department:

These certificates will be paid only by a Paymaster belonging to the Pay District from which such certificates are presented.

At the close of every month each Paymaster who has paid any of these certificates will forward, direct to the Paymaster-General, a list, giving the number, amount and name of the person in whose favor issued, of each certificate so paid by him, and also names of persons to whom the payment was made.

If any certificates are presented to any Paymaster outside of the district from which they emanate, he will refer them to the senior Paymaster of the proper Pay District for payment.

Where a Paymaster is transferred from one District to another, he will forward the list as above required, made up to date of his changing his station, and commence a fresh list from time he enters on duty at his new station.

Where a Paymaster resigns, he will make up and forward such list to date he closes his accounts.

T. P. ANDREWS, Paymaster-General U. S. A.

MINNESOTA SOLDIERS AND THE ELECTION.

WAR DEPARTMENT, ADJUTANT-GENERAL'S OFFICE, WASHINGTON, Aug. 31, 1863.

General Orders, No. 235.—By an act of the Legislature of the State of Minnesota, approved Sept. 27, 1862, the right to vote for certain State officers is given to voluntary or soldiers from that State in the military service of the United States; and provision is made for the appointment of commissioners to the regiments of Minnesota Volunteers, for the purpose of carrying out this act. It is hereby ordered that all such duly accredited Commissioners from Minnesota be furnished with proper facilities for visiting the volunteers from that State, and allowed access to them for the purpose in view. By order of the Secretary of War.

E. D. TOWNSEND, Assistant Adjutant-General.

Death of Major Underwood.

UTICA, N. Y., Saturday, Sept. 5.

Maj. RICHARD UNDERWOOD, United States mustering and disbursing officer for the Northern District of New-York, died in this City this evening, aged about 37 years. He served with distinction in the Mexican war, and on the 24 of March, 1862, received a commission of Second Lieutenant in the Fourth Regular Infantry. Since the close of that war, until within two years past, he was engaged during most of the time in recruiting, on duty in California and Oregon. On the 14th of May, 1862, he was promoted, from a Captaincy in the Fourth Regular Infantry, to a Majority in Eighteenth United States Infantry. His remains will be taken on Monday to Geneva, where he will be buried.

NEWS FROM FORTRESS MONROE.

FORTRESS MONROE, Friday, Sept. 4.

The steamship S. R. Spaulding, Capt. HOWES, arrived, at 9 o'clock last evening, from off Charleston.

The reports having left Morris Island on Monday last, and that a severe storm had prevailed there for several days, making it very rough where our fleet lay, and entirely stopping all naval operations.

Mr. G. C. FERNS, of the Baltimore American, was a passenger by the Spaulding, and left on the steamer John Farron, for Washington, this evening.

The steamer John A. Warner, Capt. COTE, from Washington, and the United States gunboat Fort Jackson, from New-York, arrived this morning.

From San Francisco.

SAN FRANCISCO, Friday, Sept. 4.

Sailed, steamer Constitution, carrying 100 passengers and $273,000 in treasure for New-York.

The Constitution also takes $372,000 in treasure for England, and $505,000 for Panama. The latter sum is supposed to have been forwarded from the Sub-Treasury here on Government account, but the Sub-Treasurer denies it. Another theory is, that the shipment has something to do with the purchase of the Alaskan quicksilver mine.

Low's majority for Governor is now estimated at 16,000, without the vote of the absent soldiers, which, it is believed, will increase it to 20,000.

The election for delegates to the Constitutional Convention of Nevada Territory gives, in all the precincts, as far as heard from, large Union majorities.

The California Election.

SAN FRANCISCO, Thursday, Sept. 3.

DISPATCH TO SECRETARY CHASE.

Union ticket elected by overwhelming majorities. By her votes, California has set an example worthy of imitation.

DISPATCH TO PRESIDENT LINCOLN.

SAN FRANCISCO, Thursday, Sept. 3.

Abraham Lincoln:

Loyal California sends greeting. The Union State and Congressional tickets are elected by a majority of twenty-five to thirty thousand. F. F. LOW.

GEN. WRIGHT TO THE SECRETARY OF WAR.

SAN FRANCISCO, Cal., Thursday, Sept. 3.

Edwin M. Stanton, Secretary of War:

Union State ticket is carried by a large majority. Large contributions to sanitary funds.

GEORGE WRIGHT, Brigadier-General.

F. F. LOW TO THE SECRETARY OF WAR.

SAN FRANCISCO, Thursday, Sept. 3.

Hon. Edwin M. Stanton, Secretary of War, Washington:

We have moved on the enemy's works, and they are ours. California, by her votes, bids you and the army God speed in your arduous and glorious work.

F. F. LOW.

Washington News at Lockport.

LOCKPORT, N. Y., Friday, Sept. 4.

WASHBURN HUNT addressed a large meeting here this evening in opposition to the Abolition policy of the Administration and in favor of restoring the Union as it was. He presented a petition to the President, asking him to revoke his proclamation, and in its stead proclaim that when the people of any State lay down their arms, such State may return under the Constitution. The petition was adopted with great enthusiasm.

Trouble Between a Naval Officer and a Provost-Marshal.

WASHINGTON, Saturday, Sept. 5.

The Navy Department has received information of the killing at Natchez of Acting-Master R. A. TUNER, commanding United States steamer Curlew, by Maj. MCKEE, the Provost-Marshal of that city.

A Commission to investigate the matter relieved the Marshal from all blame.

A Banker Absconds.

CINCINNATI, Saturday, Sept. 5.

The Gazette has a dispatch from Indianapolis which says:

"ELIAS PARKINSON, an old resident of this city, who recently opened a banking-house, absconded yesterday with $90,000 belonging to the depositors."

Fire in Chicago.

CHICAGO, Saturday, Sept. 5.

About thirty tenement houses in State, Hubbard, and Court-streets were destroyed by fire this afternoon. Eighty families were rendered homeless. The loss is estimated at $45,000.

Large Fire at Dunville, C. W.

DUNVILLE, C. W., Sunday, Sept. 6.

A large fire broke out here last night. Two buildings and stores on Main-street were consumed. Loss $45,000.

SCENES FROM VERDUN.

A Night at the New-York Times—Correspondents in Bad Odor in Kansas—Opinions of the Rebellion—The Secession of Western Virginia—The Russian Fleets, &c.

Correspondence of the New-York Times.

VERDUN, Sunday, Aug. 16, 1863.

The sight of a NEW-YORK TIMES this morning was like the face of a dear old friend; and indeed, next to the Stars and Stripes, which we seldom see in these distant seas, I know of no inanimate object which could bring more joy, because when I look it like the patter of a tried friend I know it is loyal, and so I will tell you that away here at the foot of the Pyrenees Alps, and upon the Adriatic, there were many glad hearts when the news arrived of our glorious successes. Not alone the Americans here, but the eyes of Austrian-Italy are looking wistfully toward the success of liberty the world over, and is glad to receive consolation and strength from any source, preparatory to that longed-for day when she shall successfully throw off the yoke which galls so cruelly the fair isle of Italy.

In an extended journey one meets with intelligent people from all parts of the world, and of the many opinions and feelings expressed, I have, with scarcely an exception, heard only sympathy for liberty and the North. And I may appropriately say here, that the only unpleasant or disagreeable personage I have met, has been the Northern Copperhead, who was without a modification of his Government and its supporters, but never a word against those who seek to destroy our Union. But he assured these men are despised by every European who has for his country a loyal feeling—and say, truly, the open rebels are more honorable.

An intelligent Russian said to me to-day, in speaking of our rebellion, "We expected better things of you, and had set you an example which you should have followed long ago, by liberating your bondsmen. And not only for your own sake, but the world, whose eyes are upon you." He also assured me—as have others—that we are so sadly misled by the English and French papers in regard to the Polish rebellion, as has been all Europe in regard to ours by the same source; and that it is a rebellion of an almost extinct nobility, whose power, like their serfs, has crushed them, and not of the common classes.

This lovely city, so rich in art, history and song; so beautiful with her sea, gondolas, palaces, campanili and domes; so clean and tranquil, without the sound of hoof or speck of dust; so musical, with her pleasing cars, chiming bells and vocal sounds, is entirely deserted by her young men, who, rather than live or take any risk of serving the tyrant, leave all they most love to hang upon her borders, in all the adjacent cities, awaiting the time when their arms or lives shall be needed in the restoration of the Republic or union with Italy. And the beautiful lagoon which was once filled with the commerce of the world, is now unruffled save by the few small Austrian vessels, which with their picturesque yellow color, look with their reflection like so many butterflies upon the surface of a mirror. All are patriots here, patient, but never indifferent; for, at a word or glance, their passion is armed. Love of country, with all its train of liberty, peace, beauty, art and strength from any source, preparatory to that longed-for day when she shall successfully throw off the yoke which galls so cruelly the fair isle of Italy.

MONETARY AFFAIRS.

[illegible]

The panic in the Railway speculation appeared to subside at the Board of the Stock Exchange this forenoon, and before the close of the day on the Street the improvement became quite general. Early in the dealings of the morning much steadiness, comparatively speaking, was shown on New-York Central, Erie, Reading and Hudson River, while Harlem and Michigan Southern, and some of the other Western Roads, fluctuated violently, and the continued pressure to sell for cash denoted a still unsettled liquidation of accounts between the Brokers and their Bull customers. But before the close of the Bank hours, on the Street, the upward turn extended to these Stocks also, and at 4 o'clock the general Share market was firm, at about the following figures, compared with Friday night:

[illegible]

The Money Market to the Stock Brokers today was less difficult than on Thursday and Friday in making up their Bank accounts, but heavy differences were paid to carry Stocks over a week or ten days. Several of the leading Bull firms seem to have been hard run earlier in the week, provided for their wants early in the day, and no defaults occurred among them, notwithstanding the absence from town for several of their active partners when the panic began, the confidence of the Street in the subsidence of the pressure was much stronger this afternoon than last night. The large speculative profits heretofore made have enabled the parties referred to, to pay heavily for the temporary use of Money to tide over the present difficulty, either in differences for buyers' options at the Stock Board, or extra interest and commissions on the Street, and it is certainly to their credit that they have met and overcome the emergencies of a tuesday-fee per week decline, without either counting the cost or striking their colors.

There was a reaction of 1½ ₱ cent. in the price of Gold to-day, after it was known that the improved supply of Bills drawn against Stocks and Produce had reduced the shipments by this day's packet to three hundred thousand dollars. Several large parcels bought earlier in the week for export were resold and Bills substituted at relatively lower rates. The entire shipments of the week from this port are only $509,779; but the daily demand to pay Customs was unusually active. The receipts at the Treasury to-day for the Popular Loan amount to $392,750; for Customs, $146,000, the lightest day of the week. The balances this afternoon amount to $26,562,236.

The following bids were made to-day for the City Bank Stocks:

Manhattan	126	Am. Exchange	107¾
Mechanics'	109	Chatham	98

LEAVENWORTH, KANSAS, Sunday, Aug. 30, 1863.

The telegraph has already informed you of the meeting hereabouts on Thursday last, and the resolutions passed denouncing Jennison and calling a gathering of the people, with arms, on the 5th of September, the day before the expiration of the period of grace given by Gen. Ewing for the citizens to leave the doomed counties. The object of this gathering is apparent. It is to avenge and punish for the massacre of Lawrence. There is no doubt that, unless a change in the commanders occur in this Department, there will be a large assemblage of armed citizens, aroused and maddened with the spirit of retaliation. There is no doubt, also, that Gen. Ewing will endeavor to prevent the entrance into Missouri of those who may assemble under the appeared call. Already he has placed guards (at least such is the report) at the various ferries on the Kansas River, with the view of preventing the crossing of armed citizens from Northern Kansas. If this be true, a collision seems inevitable. The following has been extensively circulated:

To the People of Kansas:

At an immense meeting of the citizens of Leavenworth County, held on Thursday evening, August 27, the following resolution, introduced by Senator Lane, was unanimously adopted, and is published for the information of all concerned:

Resolved, That as many of the loyal men of the border as can be spared from home protection be requested to assemble at Paola on the 5th day of September, with such arms and ammunition as they may severally provide and supplied as follows: Each twenty men to select a captain, and bring with them a wagon and one blanket each, and fifteen days subsistence.

D. R. ANTHONY, President.

The greatest activity prevails in the State, organizing the militia, under the proclamation of Gov. CARRYL. In this city a full regiment and a half of infantry drill every day, and a very respectable cavalry battalion, with a three gun battery. All along the border the militia are organizing, and ten thousand male citizens are ready for defence of the State at this time. Bushwhackers have made small raids into Linn County since the Lawrence affair.

There is nothing new in that unfortunate town. The citizens are recovering from the effects of the terrible calamity. Business men are determined to go ahead. As an evidence let me record an honorable instance. JOHN SPEAR, United States Collector, and editor of the Lawrence Tribune lost his two eldest sons by the assassins' hand, had his printing office destroyed, and with it not only the subscription list and accounts, but all the books, papers, vouchers, etc., belonging to his collectorship. He, however, went to Topeka and got out the regular issue of the Tribune, and this morning started to Chicago to obtain materials to start anew. Nothing can destroy such energy. What is more needed is capital to be loaned in assisting merchants and mechanics to rebuild. For the immediate wants of the suffering and bereaved, the abundant subscriptions of the nation will be sufficient.

Lieut. COLES, Acting Assistant Com. of Musters for the District of the Frontier, arrived here on Friday from Gen. Ewing's command. He left Fort Blunt on the 19th inst. At that time, Col. COLES, of the Kansas Second, with his own regiment, the First Arkansas cavalry, and some other, with four guns of RAGE'S Eighth Indiana battery, in all 2,000 men, was within 40 miles of Fort Blunt, coming from Fayetteville, Ark. The rebel Gen. STAND had fallen back from the vicinity of Blunt and even of Honey Springs, and was some forty miles distant. It was supposed he intended to swing round upon Fort Smith, but in all probability Gen. BLUNT will move in that direction with a view of occupying it first. STAND is said to have but 7,000 men with him, his Indians having mostly gone home. Gen. BLUNT by this time is in camp on the south side of the Arkansas, having issued orders for a movement on the 19th. Fort Blunt is very unhealthy, and a change was required. The rebels are evidently manoeuvring for the purpose of getting out of the way, both of BLUNT and the Expedition under DAVIDSON coming up the Arkansas. R. J. R.

OPERATIONS ON THE PENINSULA.

Particulars of the Recent Reconnoissance to Bottom's Bridge.

Correspondence of the New-York Times.

CAMP NEAR WILLIAMSBURG, VA., Saturday, Aug. 29, 1863.

The cavalry arm of the service in this Department has been kept in constant activity since Maj. Gen. FOSTER assumed command. Besides our raids toward Weldon, N. C., and through the counties east of the Chowan River, we have just returned from a reconnoissance to the very doors of Richmond.

A cavalry brigade composed of the Fifth Pennsylvania and First New-York Mounted Rifles, commanded by Col. S. P. CURTIN, of the latter regiment, moved from this point on the 22d inst. to discover, if possible, the amount of rebel force between our outer pickets and the intrenchments about Richmond. The Fifth Pennsylvania regiment, Lieut.-Col. LEWIS, took the advance. When at Burnt Ordinary, some twelve miles from this place, we came upon a rebel picket of five men, and a squadron of the Fifth charged—following the rebels in a spirited style for five miles. The following day the Mounted Rifles led the way, charging into New-Kent Court-house and driving a party of Secesh out of the place. The rebels lost one man killed and two wounded.

We rested at the Court-house two hours, and pushed on rapidly. Our advance guard kept continually charging small squads of the enemy's cavalry, who appeared at intervals on fast horses, running for dear life and the Chickahominy River.

The command again halted to rest weary horses and men within seven miles of Bottom's Bridge. Toward evening the First and Third battalions of the Mounted Rifles, the advance commanded by Major WHEELAN, the whole under Lieut.-Col. PATTON, started for Bottom's Bridge. When about two miles from our starting-point, a running fight occurred with a squadron of the enemy's cavalry. We kept up the run in the blinding dust and hot sun until we arrived at Bottom's Bridge, thirteen miles from the rebel capital. Here we found a force of rebel infantry strongly intrenched. We dismounted skirmishers and had some spirited sharp-shooting.

The rebels had gained sufficient time on their fresh horses to tear up the planks of the bridge. The object of the expedition being accomplished, the column moved about and leisurely returned to bivouac with the remainder of the brigade. Not a sign of a rebel appeared in our rear, and our sleep was undisturbed. Our men were covered with dust, and our horses nearly worn out. The whole lost one man killed near Bottom's Bridge. We left his body with people living along the road.

We have greatly the advantage of the rebel cavalry in the use of the breech-loading rifle. They, of course, are obliged to load from the muzzle, and can deliver but one volley from their double-barreled shot-guns before we are on them.

We were not disturbed during our return until we arrived at a place called Slatersville, four miles this side of New-Kent Court-house. At this place the pickets of the Fifth Pennsylvania were attacked, and one man killed and one wounded. A section of the Fifth drove the rebels back to the Court-House. Maj. WHEELAN, of the Mounted Rifles, then advanced beyond the Court House, deploying his battalion in a dismounted manner as skirmishers. We found a deserted squadron on the road, but not having prisoners they fled. We returned to camp, at this place, without further occurrence of interest.

The Mounted Rifles did not lose a man. The Fifth lost but one. The rebel loss was three killed and three captured.

An intelligent refugee, who has just arrived from Richmond, says that our raid created great excitement in the city, every able-bodied man being compelled to turn out and skedaddle yesterday. C.

AFFAIRS IN THE WEST.

The Copperhead Troubles—Pay Bounties Furnished by Rebels—Miscellaneous.

CHICAGO, MONDAY, Aug. 31, 1863.

THE COPPERHEAD TROUBLES.

The Copperhead troubles still continue in the central and southern counties of this State. Since my last there have been several demonstrations—some of them of a clumsy and threatening character. A band of about 150 armed men came into Paris, the county seat of Edgar County, one day last week, and threatened violence to the Federal officers and to the Union men. Paris being on the line of the railroad and telegraph, the authorities in this State and Indiana were soon informed of the demonstration, and an adequate force to monitor still such matters was soon at hand; whereat the Copperheads dispersed to their homes without committing any outrages. There is no doubt, however, but that Gen. BURNSIDE
